It says: "Advices of the growing crop continue to be of a discouraging character from a large portion of the cotton-growing section. Still, they do not reproduce so quickly, and pass away with one generation. As we have before stated, the condition of the plant, owing to the rayages of these grass-worms last year may be exceeded. IMPORTANT DECISION.

Many capitalists in the North will be interested in a decision of the South Carolina Supreme Court, made on Saturday, in what are known as "the phosphate cases." It was held, first, that the State is the absolute owner of all the land under navigable waters within its territorial soil by the State is not in trust for the whole people, but vests in the State as the public; third, that the right to dig minerals or phosphare for the state as the state as the public is the state as t minerals or phosphate from soils under the navigable waters of the State is not common to the whole of the people, but the subject of grant or license by the State; fourth, that all who enter upon the woil of the State and remove fossils, minerais or phosphates from under the navigable waters, are trespassers. The pendng cases were held to be in the nature of espass, and an injunction was, therefore, granted. These cases possess general interest all over the country, but are of especial interest in New Jersey, where the same question is involved under what the same question is involved under what is known as "Ripsrian Rights," and where, after much litigation, a decision White Pine Flooring. similar to that of the South Carolina Court has been arrived at,
